The Last Second Chance: A Small Town Love Story (Blue Moon Book 3)

Synopsis

What would it take to get one last chance? Joey Greer is done having her heart broken. Eight years ago, after a horrific car accident, Jackson Pierceâher high school sweetheartâabandoned her. Abandoned his family. Abandoned the town they'd both grown up in, and fled to Hollywood. He never looked back, and she never forgot him. Or forgave him. Now he's back, pretending like the past doesn't exist, wanting another chance. And even though she still feels the undeniable connection between them, the fiery attraction that burns her up from the inside out, Joeyâs determined to keep him at a safe distance. Jackson Pierce can't tell Joey the truth about the night when he left her in the hospital. It would ruin more than just their relationship, and he can't do that to her. The entire town of Blue Moon knows that Jax and Joey are meant for each other, but Joey isnât interested in giving him a second chance. All he can do is give her flowers. And picnic lunches. And a dog. Oh, and handcuff himself to her for charity. Will this second chance be the last one Jax needs to win back Joey's heart, or is the past too much to forgive?

I am a big Lucy Score fan. I know I will laugh and cry and fall in love in her books. I will love the secondary characters as well because she does such a fantastic job fleshing out the world her H and h live in. And probably I'll understand the motivations and decisions of her characters despite not agreeing with all of them. That's a huge part of this book. But I'm so conflicted with this one.SPOILERS maybe maybe by the end of the book I understand why her dad and Jax did what they did. And that they did it out of love. So he took off on her. Thought he'd prove himself worthy of her so he could come back to the one and only woman for him, but while he was doing that he'd just sleep with a bunch of women in LA?? I can't get past it. I can't get past her accepting it either. And never once bringing it up except as a joke. I'm pretty sure he was her first. He was supposed to be her only. I guess in the end I felt like there was a huge hole/conflict in the middle of this book. Either eight years have passed and you're the same people - immature, crazy in love so you make stupid decisions, committed to a future together - or you're very different people who have lived lives separate from each other. Made lives independent of each other which would then justify sleeping with other women. Because you were building a life without her. But if you thought you were always going to come back and she's the only woman you think of...You don't get to be both or maybe it's more that trying to justify yourself with both just doesn't cut it for me. I didn't believe Jax. The things coming out of his mouth completely conflicted with what he actually did.
