Customer Reviews

This book was entertaining at many parts, but don't be fooled by the title. The book is very low on the mystery aspect, and very high on pretty explicit "romantic" content. Don't get me wrong, many people would say the book is fine on that count, but I just wasn't expecting the level of graphic detail in the book. But the main problem is that the story was by turns predictable and unrealistic.

Stunningly beautiful woman meets handsome and successful man under out-of-the-ordinary circumstances, and by the end of the book (SPOILER) they're together. Predictable. They only have eyes for each other, but both don't believe the other feels the same way, despite OVERWHELMING evidence to the contrary. An eel could have understood reciprocated affection faster than these two, and it doesn't feel honest, being rather a cheap way to drag things on for a couple more pages each chapter. Unrealistic. A horse who is far past his racing prime and at the door to retirement begins to win races because the female protagonist likes him and braids his hair? So silly and requires extreme suspension of disbelief. It also functions as a cheesy metaphor, revealed at the end of the book with an attempt at flourish but which only produces a whimper, that this girl "colors the male lead's life like she colored his horse." Ugh. Also, everyone likes this girl and she is talented at mostly everything, except when making huge blunders that would have had anyone, even an owner's daughter, kicked out immediately. The male romantic lead also appears to have huge sums of money even though approximately only one horse of his is said in the book to win... and yet he buys everyone breakfast each day to feed the romantic heroine.
