Got this book today as part of the Kindle First Program. Natalie is a college sophomore in desperate need of money to pay for her tuition. So she takes a job in a costume shop run by a group of people that includes one of her professors and a couple of classmates. But this shop is anything but normal. The group of people living in the back of the shop are actually from another world, and a portal in their shop connects their world to ours. In their world, things are very different. There are Houses of Sisters, Mudugs, and Nalas- giant humanoid spiders/insects. The various groups in their world are fighting for domination. Natalie's costume shop groupies have been trying to send a message to a hermit in their world, but have been unsuccessful. Only someone that's not from their world can send the message. So they enter Natalie's mind using "dream-spoke" and persuade her to deliver the message. Will she succeed in her quest, and will she be able to return to her world safely? This book's description reminded me a lot of The Lion, The Witch, and The Wardrobe. But unfortunately this book is nowhere near as good. It was way too bogged down by endless details, characters, words, and phrases specific to Fourline- the world on the other side of the portal. The author was taking way too long to explain these details. I'm not saying she should reveal the plot or eliminate the suspense, but there were countless scenes and conversations that I didn't understand at all because the author didn't explain any of it. The characters might as well have been speaking in a foreign language. After over two hours of reading, I was left with a plethora of questions and not a single answer. Considering how far I was into the book, I should have been starting to get some answers.
