Customer Reviews

I use Lecture Ready 2 for an Intermediate level oral communication class. The class focuses on listening and note-taking skills, academic discussion skills, and presentation skills. This textbook covers all 3 focuses, which is rare to find in a textbook. I have used Contemporary Topics from Longman and Listening and Notetaking Skills from Cengage, and I think Lecture Ready is better than the others. First, it has videos of Lectures. Second, it has vocabulary and strategy building. It covers both listening strategies and note-taking strategies. For the presentation skills, each unit covers a specific area of giving a presentation and presents a short video clip of someone giving a bad presentation and then you see a clip of a good presentation. The topics are the typical academic topics: language, media, business, food, etc. They aren't as interesting as the other textbooks but still decent. The best thing about the series is the audio and video for all exercises is free and online! You don't have to buy an expensive CD or DVD like the other two textbooks. If you order your textbooks through Oxford, you get access to a series of assessments for your class. Sounds good, right? Well, the assessments through Oxford are useless and not worth working with their inefficient and incompetent customer service and shipping departments. The assessments don't always include a lecture for each unit, and if they do have a lecture they are only about 2 minutes long. If there is no lecture, you get a student giving a presentation instead. You are better off having your students buy the books through .I highly, highly recommend this series as the best of a very small number of choices that are out there for a teacher.
