Customer Reviews

My son ran the Iditarod twice, in 1993 and 1994. This is the story of his adventures, told in his words. Folks who have known him and read it say that it's like having him talking to you. It's a view of the Iditarod not seen from the polished views of veterans.

Very interesting and detailed. You could visualize the terrain from the story as if you were there. Refreshing view. I've often wondered about all the trials & tribulations rookies go through or mushers who are training teams & I not out for the win.

I felt like I was on the trail with Mark. I could see the trail as he told the story and could hear the runners on the snow and feel the dogs energy. The trust, caring, understanding and love that Mark had for the well being of the dogs really came through. Even though I have been a member of the ITC since 1988, I learned a lot through Marks story. Very well written and I was taken from Anchorage to Nome in fine style. Hike!
